part in our lives, a TV commercial for a popular credit card seems to sum up such moments as those experienced at Christmas – 'the love and sheer bliss that friends and family bring to our hearts and homes at Christmas are priceless', for everything else there is a credit card.

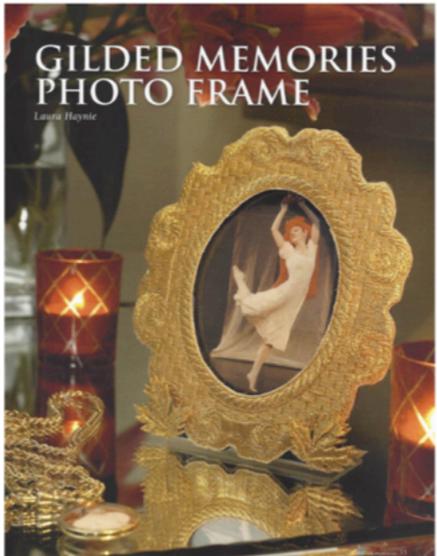

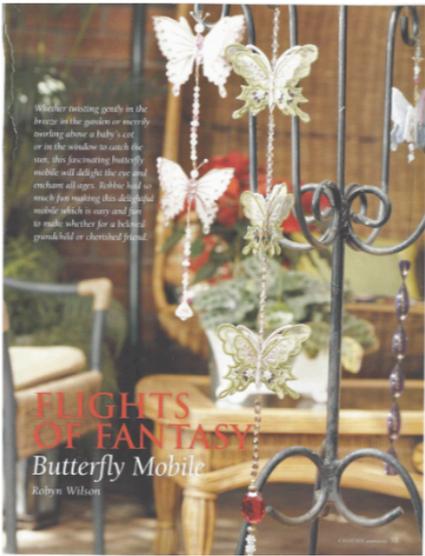

JENNY HASKINS

Digital free armwork – popular for our US readers – has been overlaid with the effect of paper armwork because of superior and more accurate, neatly hand-drawn and tracing, we would all rather spend our time sewing and being creative. However, like me, I am sure you have an abundance of beautiful free armwork, and it is these forgotten treasures that inspired this series. Two lovely shadow work (the machine) free pillow, edged with Batastony lace. It is possible to replicate hand shadow work by machine, using a free arm needle. Previously this was done by hand with the fabric and stabilizer in a hoop, now it is possible to achieve an even better effect using digital embroidery designs, that incorporate a section of the design that requires the use of a free needle – Jenny's Free Needle Shadow Work by Machine is the perfect vehicle for achieving this. It should be noted that a free arm needle gives the optimum effect, as it most closely resembles hand work, however smaller needles can also be used to produce a similar effect.

Print this out and trace onto cardboard to create your own tassel and fringe maker.

The center rectangle should measure 5" when printed. If it is a bit off that will not be an issue.

Be sure to transfer those 2 little lines in the center rectangle to your fringe maker...those are the lines indicating where to zig zag over your cords to create a small loop.
